

Some amateurs have been getting out of control on the amount of bandwidth they use. I don't think that's such a big deal except for the fact they are causing interference to other hams. I think the best way is to have the Official Observers record hams using too much bandwidth. Sounding good is a hobby in itself for some people and I wouldn't want to take that away, but I also don't want to take away being able to hear someone in my conversation because they want to sound better.
